U.S. House of Representatives passes 'Protect the 'Right to Organize Act,' 225-206, sends bill to U.S. Senate

There has been no major labor reform since the 1930s, Democrats are seizing on the opportunity to strengthen workers' rights and greater opportunity to unionize.

On Tuesday, March 9, 2021 the US House of Representatives passed the PRO (Protect the Right to Organize) Act, the most pro-worker labor reform in decades, according to the bill's sponsors, by a vote of 225-206. It will now go to the US Senate.

The PRO Act would strengthen workers' right to strike for better wages and working conditions, strengthen safeguards to ensure that workers can hold fair union elections, and allow the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) to impose fines against bosses who violate workers' rights.
